OUR WOOL AND ITS PRICE

CHANGES MADE IN THE NEW TARIFF LAW OF 1890.

The Decline in Wools the World Over. Effect on American Wool—What the Price Would Have Been but for the Increased Tariff—Outlook for the Future.

President Cleveland's message proposing free wool created much consternation among wool growers lest the price of American wool should be depressed to the level of foreign wools by placing wool upon the free list.

When congress revised the tariff in 1890 the leading wool growers asked for the very moderate increase upon raw wool of one cent per pound. What they most desired was the correction of two serious abuses by which the spirit and intent of the law of 1883 was avoided. Clothing wools of low grade were being imported as carpet wools. The growers asked that these qualities be reclassified so as to pay the same duty as other clothing wools. Highly purified scoured wool, after having been carded and then combed into top, was broken up in order to give it the appearance of waste, so that it might be admitted under the commercial name of waste at only one-third of its proper duty. Outside of the correction of these two abuses the wool growers asked for only one cent per pound additional duty, which was all the increase that they thought practicable in the schedules upon raw wool at this time. They were aware that they were suffering from inadequate Protection upon manufactures of wool. American woolen mills were failing and the consumption of wool in the United States was decreasing, while woolen manufacture was being transferred from America to England at a rapid rate, pointing in the near future to the destruction of the home market for American wool. They therefore urged the importance of such necessary increased duties upon manufactures of wool as would lead to the making in this country of the woolen fabrics formerly made here, but recently imported.

Now, after eight months' experience with the McKinley bill, wool growers are satisfied that if the bill is given a fair trial it will give them the degree of Protection on wool which they expected and asked for. Some disappointment exists because of the recent decline in wools in the outside markets of the world, causing a corresponding decline in the United States, but the wool growers realize that their wool sells for more money in the seaboard cities of the United States by twelve cents per pound than the same wool would bring in the London market, and while they regret the downward tendency of clothing wool prices all over the world they are aware that but for the timely passage of the McKinley bill, owing to inadequate Protection to manufacturers of wool, they must ultimately have taken very much lower prices for their wool than they are now receiving.

Well informed wool growers believe that failure to pass the McKinley bill would have been followed by prices for wool five cents per pound lower than today's prices, and the passage of the Mills bill in its place would have been followed by a decline of twelve cents per pound to bring American wool to the level of similar wools in London, the latter market dominating prices for the whole outside world. The McKinley bill has caused a decrease in the importation of manufactures of wool during the first half of the year 1891 and has greatly stimulated manufacturing in the United States, causing an enormous increased consumption of wool conservatively estimated at over 5,000,000 pounds per month. This view is strengthened by the increased importation of foreign wools during the same period. It was known that an increased manufacturing of wool in America must necessarily at first be accompanied by increased importations of wool, as the process of increase in American stock is slow. A large percentage of lambs find their way to market for mutton and never produce more than their first crop of wool.

The United States consul, Griffin, at Sydney, Australia, reports that the wool growers of that continent received nearly 25 per cent. less for their clip now being marketed in London than they obtained for the previous year's clip. The American wool grower in northern Ohio is receiving thirty cents per pound for the washed fleece clipped from Shropshire sheep, as against thirty-three cents last year, a decline of only 10 per cent. The same sheep in Canada are producing exactly the same wool, which is selling there at only eighteen cents, as against thirty cents in Ohio.

The passage of the McKinley bill, coming opportunely as it did just before a decline in wool all over the world, saved the American grower from disaster.

The McKinley bill is daily leading to the manufacture in the United States of woolen fabrics that heretofore were imported. As an illustration, we point to the largest importer of worsteds in Philadelphia, who under the tariff law of 1883 manufactured his goods in Bradford, England, paying the government here nearly $1,000,000 duties upon his annual importations of cloth. That firm, owing to the McKinley bill, have discontinued manufacturing in England, and has removed its machinery to a mill on the banks of the Delaware river, and is now preparing to manufacture in this country the goods it formerly imported. American labor now uses their raw material, the largest portion of which is grown in America. We append the following extract from a recent circular of Justice Bateman & Co., which gives the situation in a few words:

"The outlook is promising for a large consumption of American wool. The decline in foreign wool and goods is responsible for the lower prices for American wool as compared with this time last year, yet as the consumption of wool in the United States is increasing, as it is under the McKinley bill, there is the best prospect for a good demand for the new clip so long as it is not held above the value of the competing foreign wool, and while there may be some disappointment that prices are not higher, it must be remembered that with the present tariff the American wool grower receives about twelve cents per pound more for his wool than is obtained by growers of similar wool in other parts of the world, and this much more than he would receive without this degree of Protection.

Protection Has Reduced Prices in Canada.

An interesting discussion is taking place in Canada as to the variation in the prices of cotton and woolen goods under the protective tariff. The inquiry seems to show that so far from prices having increased owing to the additional duties that were imposed twelve years ago, they have decidedly fallen off. It is stated that many articles which had to be imported in 1878, not being made in the country, are now regularly and extensively manufactured; for instance, Canadian prints, white cottons, horse blankets and woolen shawls. The prices of these in 1878 were respectively twelve cents per yard, ten cents per yard, two dollars and five dollars. At the present time they are less by 25 per cent., and the same remark applies to such cotton good as shirtings and gray cottons, and equally so to many woolens. It is interesting to recall that when a committee of the Dominion house of commons in 1874 was inquiring into the question of the flooding of the Canadian market by American goods, to the detriment of Canadian manufacturers and with the ultimate result of raising the price to the consumer, it reported as follows:

"The almost uniform testimony before your committee was to the effect that an increased Protection to manufacturers will not necessarily increase the cost of the manufactured article to the consumer, and in the opinion of your committee the witnesses have made out a very strong case in support of this view. If, therefore, Canadian industry be relieved from the pressure of such undue competition as that referred to in the first paragraph of this report the effect will be that the manufacturing establishments will be worked to their full capacity, and the cost of production and the consequent cost to the consumer will be proportionately reduced."—London Cor. Manchester (Eng.) Courier.

Our Lost Shipping Bounty Bill.

One of the greatest pleasures attending successful rascality lies in recounting the steps involved in its achievement. This pleasure is denied to the enemies of American industries, for their heelers would be discredited by any such relation of the facts. But it is impossible in all instances to suppress a more or less satisfied reference to the processes by which the result was accomplished, either through a "ghoulish glee" or from mere inconsiderateness.

An instance of this difficulty is shown in The Blue Peter, a new British shipping journal, which says:

"Not that Uncle Sam is so entirely proof against argument. What he requires is that it shall be expressed in dollars and not merely founded on extracts culled from Adam Smith. His original shipping bounties bill became a postal subsidy bill in consequence of a formidable array of figures showing the failure of the bounty system on French shipping, which was thrust under his nose by interested parties."

From this it seems that when Representative Fithian was charging Charles S. Hill with being "a lobbyist in the interest of legislation, the history of which renders it at least questionable," interested parties were expressing in dollars the arguments which debased the original shipping bounty bill into the postal subsidy bill and cut the remuneration for postal subsidies down to two-thirds of the original figure.

No wonder that British vesselmen are jubilant

How Is the Tariff a Tax?

The editorial department of an afternoon newspaper, while sauntering about in its private capacity, was asked a few questions about the tariff. "Oh," remarked the department, with an oracular wafture of the hand, "the tariff is a tax."

"Yes," said the inquirer, greatly subdued by the dread profundity of the answer; "I—I—have sometimes heard it referred to in the way, but I really cannot understand it to be so." The editorial department looked its most pitiful pity.

"What bothers me," said the questioner, "is wire nails. When the tariff was put on wire nails they were selling at eight cents a pound."

"That made them twelve cents a pound."

"Now, that's what troubles me. Under that tariff wire nails are now selling at 2¼ cents a pound. How is the tariff a tax in that case?"—Indianapolis Journal.

American Goods the Best.

We remember very distinctly the time when American goods were looked upon in almost every line as being of an inferior quality especially as regarded textile fabrics. Everything to have the stamp of quality, durability and excellence, must be imported or be of foreign make. This, however, has entirely changed. You can go into some of our large clothing houses and find a label upon a madenp suit. "This is exclusively American and guaranteed to hold its color or money refunded."

The same can be said today of fast black hosiery, of silks and other lines of domestic dress goods. It requires an expert to distinguish any difference between many lines of American and foreign goods, and even an expert cannot tell in some instances whether the goods are made in this country or in Germany, France or England.

American Watches Best and Cheapest.

One of the leading watch manufacturers of England in a recent speech made this admission: "If you think I exaggerate, let me ask you to compare the manufacture of watches as it existed in England twenty years ago with the same as it exists in Waltham today. All materials, labor, prestige and experience were in our favor and we ought to have retained the trade. Nevertheless, English consumers are today buying American watches in large quantities and better ones for the money than can be made here."—American Mail and Export Journal.

How the Anglomaniac Was Fooled.

A young man of Anglomaniac tendencies boastfully called attention to his six dollar derby the other day, and proclaimed it a London hat of far superior quality to the American derby. A knowing friend took the hat, and disregarding the lion and unicorn brand of the lining, turned up the sweat band. Hidden away underneath and securely gummed to the felt was a bit of paper bearing the legend, "United Hat Workers of America."—Cohoskill Mail.

The highest trestle on the line of the Northern Pacific railroad is that across the Corsican defile, about twelve miles west of Missoula, Mon. The track level is exactly 300 feet 9 inches above the rocks in the gorge below.

PARTED BY HIS VIOLIN.

A TRUE STORY OF YOUNG LOVE THAT DID NOT RUN SMOOTH.

Captain Button's Happy Marriage with the Belle of North Haven Many Years Ago—Why the Cozy Home Was Broken Up and the Husband Is a Wanderer.

No one would have suspected that Sofia was a shrew. She was of medium height, with bright brown eyes and a sweet face. These with a fine form and charming manner made her much sought after by the young men of North Haven. She chose to bestow her sweetest smiles on Julius Button, a whole souled, hardy young sailor, and all those who sought Sofia's hand felt a pang of envy when Julius led her to the altar.

The young couple settled down to the humdrum life of the small village in which both had been born and reared. For a time they were as happy as ever two young people who seemed made for each other could be.

Julius had accumulated a snug sum of money and was disposed to take life easily. The apple of his eye was his wife. Next in his affection was his violin, and with those two for company he was content to spend his evenings at home.

Although her husband played very well, Sofia cared nothing for music and detested a violin above all things. For a while she said nothing. Then she would leave Julius and his violin and would run over to one of the neighbor's to spend the evening. It dawned upon Julius that the strains he drew from his violin were not appreciated by his wife.

Then Sofia began to show that beneath a sweet exterior there lay smoldering a fiery temper that when once let loose was simply ungovernable, and violent outbursts on her part became more and more frequent.

Julius bore it all uncomplainingly, for he loved his wife dearly. His was a gentle nature that never held malice and he knew Sofia loved him, so he was patient. But all things must end some time, and his patience was no exception to the rule.

ANGER THAT CAUSED SORROW.

One afternoon Julius went home and picked up his violin. He had drawn the bow but a few times before Sofia exclaimed, "I wish you would stop that noise."

Julius paid no heed to the request which had been made in such a mandatory tone. Sofia became angrier as her husband continued playing, and at last shouted, "Julius, I want you to stop that noise." But Julius only smiled and kept on playing. Sofia grew livid with rage, and seizing a pan of water threw it into Julius' face.

Then her husband put away his violin and left the house. In the evening he came back and began packing up his clothing. Sofia had recovered from her paroxysm of anger and was willing to be forgiven, but did not ask it. Her woman's curiosity could not be restrained, however, and she tremblingly asked what it all meant.

The only reply her husband vouchsafed was that he had shipped on a vessel bound for Virginia after a load of oysters. Days and weeks and months passed and the absent husband was not heard from and Sofia went to live with her husband's parents.

One day thirty-five years later the elder Button read of the arrival in New York of the United States brig Bainbridge, Captain Julius Button. He said nothing of the great hope that had sprung up in his breast, but hastened to New York, only to find that the brig had sailed a few hours before. But his journey was not altogether fruitless, for he learned that the captain of the Bainbridge was his own son. It lifted a heavy load from the old man's heart, although he felt keenly his disappointment at not seeing his son, who had for many years been mourned as dead.

FORTY YEARS LATER.

Sadly the old man returned to his home in North Haven. From that time he became a close reader of the newspapers and at last, four years later, his vigilance was rewarded. He read: "The United States brig Bainbridge, Captain Button, is expected to arrive at the Brooklyn navy yard tomorrow." Once more the old man journeyed to the metropolis. He found the brig with difficulty and was ushered into the cabin to await the captain, who was on shore.

Captain Button looked curiously at the gray haired old man whom he had been told wished to see him, but did not recognize him. Nor did the father recognize his son. Slowly the old man told his errand.

"I am Captain Button, sir," responded the captain.

"Don't you know me, Julius? I am your father."

It was a very affecting meeting, and when it was brought to a close the father asked tremulously, "Julius, what shall I tell mother?"

Captain Button hesitated for a moment, then, without replying to the question, he asked, "Where is Sofia?"

"She still lives with us."

"Then you may tell mother that I may come to North Haven when I come back from my next voyage."

An hour later Button, Sr., was on his way home, and Button, Jr., was on a voyage to China. When he returned two years later he learned that his father and mother were dead. Sofia still occupies the old homestead, but Captain Button has never seen her since they parted.—New York Herald.

A Floral Curiosity.

We have just been shown a curious plant by Mrs. Judge Chesnut. It is called the "snake plant," and is an oddity. The stem of the plant is of succulent nature and resembles the body of a snake. It had a large Easter lily shaped flower of dark purple color, with a single purple stamen. Its odor was offensive. It is a curiosity in this town, no one having ever seen a flower like it. It was presented to Mrs. Chesnut by her sister of Frankfort, Ky.—Platte City (Mo.) Landmark.

Diamonds have been found in British Guiana, where a gold mine owner recently collected 638 stones. An expert in London declared 633 of the specimens to be diamonds of the purest water.

A Reminiscence.

There are lullabys for babies and waltzes for young maidens, there are drinking songs for the wild oat sowers and love songs for them that love to tarry in the gloaming. But I heard Sunday the one piece of music that twanged upon the heartstrings of the married people.

Gilmore's band was playing "Reminiscences of Mendelssohn," and a thousand heads were wagging an accompaniment.

Suddenly, by way of finale, the "Wedding March" struck up. The effect was electrical. All over the audience the wedded pairs looked at each other and smiled tenderly. It was a reminiscence. What happy visions it called up!

Here was a couple, homely, raw, from the country evidently, who had just started out to guide the plow together. The march had been played for them in the little village church not long ago, but now they heard it played indeed.

They leaned a little closer together, and her big hand, fixed out to kill in cotton mits, which showed the wedding ring, sought his and held it.

And all through the audience I saw signs of the pictures called up by that fragrant and alluring bit of music. Old couples and young, rich and poor, those who live like cats and dogs together and those who have learned the pleasant alchemy of forbearance in wedded life, all were for the moment bewitched.

Ta, ta, tara-rara, tum tiddle de dum de di do. It fairly makes me reminiscent myself, though they played Wagner at my blessed wedding.—New York Herald.

Character in Eating.

There are few things by which character is more unmistakably portrayed than by a man's choice of food and the manner in which he devours it. In his preference for coarse or delicate edibles, or lack of preference for any—in the deliberate slowness or voracious quickness with which he consumes them—traits of character otherwise hidden are revealed. The dinners of a people are an infallible index of the national life. It has been justly said that there is a whole geological cycle of progressive civilization between the clammy dough out of which a statuette might be molded and the brittle films that melt upon the tongue like flakes of lukewarm snow.

In England one of the tests by which the various parties in the state church are unerringly distinguished is the test convivial. For example, it is said that some years ago a clergyman in that country went to a hotel to order a dinner for a number of clerical friends. "May I ask, sir," said the waiter gravely, "whether the party is high church or low church?" "Now, what on earth," cried the clergyman, "do my friends opinions matter to you?" "A great deal, sir," rejoined the waiter. "If high church, I must provide more wine; if low church, more wittles."—Professor William Matthews in Boston Traveler.

Victims of Misplaced Confidence.

There is a famous dairy farm that supplies a large city not a thousand miles away from New York. The place was started some years ago by a moneyed gentleman of very high social and religious standing in the community which he aimed to supply. Of course, the farm was extensively advertised, and among the "best families" in that city a few years ago it was scarcely possible to find one which did not boast of having upon its table the eggs, butter and milk from this establishment.

In due course of time the venerable proprietor of this farm went the way of all humanity. When his executors came to settle the affairs of his estate one of the heaviest liabilities was a large account for milk that had been regularly furnished for a period of several years from one of the largest swill milk concerns in the neighborhood. It is almost needless to say that the former patrons of this famous farm, when they learned of this little revelation, were less enthusiastic than they had been before.—New York Recorder.

A Cheerful Beggar.

"Boss," he said, "can you give me five cents to get a cup of coffee with?"

He was a Broadway beggar, with a cheerful face and a buoyant manner. Fortune had frowned upon him, but he was not at all disturbed; he simply laughed in fortune's face.

The man to whom the beggar had spoken halted. "I don't know that I have got five cents," he said, but at the same time he put his hand into his pocket. Encouraged by this movement, the cheerful beggar continued:

"Make it ten cents, and I can get a sandwich to go with the coffee."

"I can't do that," said the man, and he added, as he handed over two cents, "this is the best I can do."

"It's all right," the beggar said, "perfectly satisfactory; I ain't fixing the price."—New York Sun.

How Carl Schurz Learned English.

Few foreigners—indeed few English or Americans—speak and write the English language with the grace and purity of Carl Schurz, and he explains the fact as follows:

"When I first came to America I found that I knew as little practical English as the Yale or Harvard student who has read 'Faust' and 'Piccolomini' knows of German. I went to a bookstore and asked for the classic of the English language. The 'Vicar of Wakefield' was given me. I made a careful translation of the work into German, laid it aside for six weeks, retranslated it into English, critically compared the two versions, and knew the English language."—Youth's Companion.

Pin Superstition.

Superstition has special claims upon the pin; it should, we are told, "be lent, not given." There is a by no means small class of sensitive minded folks who regard the exchange of a pin a sure and sharp prick to friendship, and there is another goodly number that put themselves to all manner of inconvenience to stoop and pick up every pin that lies in their pathway.—Table Talk.

Her Price.

Husband—When the tailor comes for that suit of mine to be mended I want you to let him have it.

Wife—But I should think you would let me mend them; it is so much cheaper.

Husband—No, it isn't. The last time you mended my clothes it cost me $50 for a new dress for you.—Clothier and Furnisher.

Too Great a Surprise.

DOMICILE ERECTED BY JOHN.

[Translated from the Vulgate of M. Goose, by A. Pope.]

Behold the mansion reared by Dædel Jack.

See the malt stored in many a plethoric sack
In the proud cirque of Ivan's bivouac.

Mark how the rat's felonious fangs invade
The golden stores in John's pavilion laid.

Anon, with velvet foot and Tarquin strides,
Subtle Grimalkin to his quarry glides;
Grimalkin grim, that slew the fierce rodent
Whose tooth insidious Johan's sackcloth rent.

Lo! now the deep mouthed canine foe's assault,
That vexed the avenger of the stolen malt,
Stored in the precincts of that lofty hall
That rose complete at Jack's creative call.

Here stalks the impetuous cow with crumpled horn,
Whereon the exacerbating hound was torn,
Who bayed the feline slaughter beast that slew
The rat predaceous, whose keen fangs ran through
The textile fibers that involved the grain
That lay in Hans' inviolate domain.

Here walks the sad eyed damsel crowned with rue,
Lactiferous spoils from vaccine dugs who drew,
Of that cornicuate beast whose tortuous horn
Tossed to the clouds, in fierce vindictive scorn,
The braying hound, whose braggart bark and stir
Arched the lithe spine and reared the indignant fur
Of puss, that with verminicidal claw
Struck the weird rat, in whose insatiate maw
Law reeking malt that erst in Juan's courts we saw.

Robed in senescent garb, that seems, in sooth
Too long a prey to Chronos' iron tooth,
Behold the man whose loving lips incline
Full with young Eros' osculative sign,
To the lorn maiden, whose lact-albic hands
Drew albu-lactic wealth from lacteal glands.

Distort to realms ethereal was borne
The beast ululean, vexer of that sly
Ulysse quadrupedal, who made die
The old mordacious rat that dared devour
Antecedaneous ale in John's domestic bower.

Lo! here with hirsute honors deified, succinct
Of saponaceous locks, the Priest who linked
In Hymen's golden bands the thorn unthrift,
Whose means exiguous stared from many a rift,
Even as he kissed the virgin all forlorn,
Who milked the cow with implicated horn,
Who in fierce wrath the canine torturer skied
That dared to vex the insidious muricide,
Who let auroral effluence through the pelt
Of that sly rat that robbed the palace Jack had built.

The loud cantankerous Shanghae comes at last,
Whose shouts aroused the shorn ecclesiast,
Who sealed the vows of Hymen's sacrament
To him who, robed in garments indigent,
Exosculates the damsel lachrymose,
The emulgator of the horned brute morose,
That tossed the dog, that worried the cat, that killed
The rat, that ate the malt, that lay in the house that Jack built.

A Duel in the Cholera Times.

During the period of the cholera visitation Dr. Bruggemann one day had a quarrel with a retired cavalry officer, who was known to be a professional bully. As Bruggemann was the aggrieved party he had the choice of weapons. The duel was fixed for 6 o'clock the next morning. The champions and their seconds arrived punctually on the scene of action.

"Sabers or pistols?" inquired the officer's second.

"Neither," said Bruggemann. "The choice of weapons rests with me."

At that moment his servant man brought a basket containing two dishes of cucumber salad and twelve unripe apples.

"I go in for cucumber salad," the doctor coolly and politely remarked. "The offending and offended party shall each consume six apples and this carefully weighed portion of excellent cucumber salad. The result we will leave to the cholera."

Our swashbuckler had no inclination to try the effect of these murderous weapons, and a reconciliation was effected amid general hilarity.—Kalendar.

THE WATER QUESTION.

We are of the opinion that the water question should take first rank in considering the needs of Ukiah. We would place it before sewerage or light; before sewerage because, in considering the greatest good to the greatest number, more people are affected by bad water than by bad sewerage. Every resident uses water, whether he lives about the square, or on the remote edge of town. A sewer system that would benefit the entire population of Ukiah would probably cost $75 000 dollars. The $20,000 system spoken of would of necessity be confined to the more thickly settled portions of town.

While we favor sewerage and believe it necessary to the welfare of the town, we would place water first in importance, because more are affected by it, and because its natural place is first, it being necessary to subserve the workings of the sewer system.

Water is more important than light for the reason that an elaborate lighting system is a luxury rather than a necessity, and will be had from some source soon as a business venture.

Further we believe that none of the streams adjacent to Ukiah are suitable for an annual water supply. The quantity may be had in some of them, and in all of them, by impounding, and for at least eight months in the year, while the streams are flushed with rains and the volume is large, the channels are clean and the quality of the water is excellent. But in the summer and fall when the streams are low, the miniature branches which form them run through decaying vegetable matter, and the water becoming impregnated with the particles is rendered unpleasant to the taste and unfit for use. This is found to be the experience of many towns in the State that have drawn their supply from small streams.

We maintain that the streams adjacent to Ukiah are too small to furnish pure, healthful water the entire year. In our opinion Ukiah has but two sources for pure water—wells or springs. Of the two, springs with gravity pressure are preferable. We are informed that both Robinson and Cold Creeks are fed by large springs. We suggest to the Committee that they ascertain the volume, altitude, etc., of these springs, with a view to having the supply come direct before it is tainted by the soil and mixed with vegetable and organic matter.

The other solution of the question is to utilize the present supply while it is good, then resort to wells near by to make up the deficiency. It seems there are no other means whereby Ukiah can be supplied with a sufficient amount of good water twelve months in the year.

The next meeting of the California Press Association will be held at San Francisco, commencing Tuesday September 15th. On the evening of the 19th the editors will take a trip to Mt. Shasta. The S. P. Co. furnish transportation free. It will be a most delightful outing for hard worked editors.

FRESNO is the county of wonders; she has the biggest raisins, the biggest realestate boom, and the biggest irrigation systems. A bird 16 feet from tip to tip of wing, with eyes four inches across has been seen there. The alleged petrified man recently exhibited in Ukiah came from Fresno, and now they have discovered a petrified woman near the spot where the man was found—probably his wife. It is but reasonable to presume that the rest of the family will be dug up in a short time. Truly it is a county prolific of wonders.

THE present outlook for wheat growers, according to the dispatches, is better than it has been for years in the United States. The Russian crop is less than it was last year, and exportation is prohibited by law. Australia will have no surplus, and India but a small one. The United States will therefore be called upon to furnish extraordinary large surplus. To this, thanks to a fair crop all over, we are quite equal. But it would be premature to rejoice with the farmers now, for no one can tell what the speculators and shippers will do to corner the product and render its disposition subject to their will. It is to be hoped, however, that the farmers will get the greatest possible benefit from the now rapidly advancing price.

Orthoepy.

The papers are stating that the good old fashioned spelling bee is giving away to "pronunciation bees." It is said that where one word is written, one hundred are spoken. It follows then that pronunciation is vastly more important than spelling, and it is also a fact that it is more difficult to acquire correct pronunciation than it is correct spelling. The Chronicle suggests four words to be tried on any company, and says one will be surprised at the result. The words are: Coadjutor, diocesan, squalor, and isolate. For the instruction and amusement of teachers, pupils, and others of our readers who are interested in correct pronunciation, we append the following test in pronunciation. It is called the dream of the orthoepist, and would make a good basis for a series of "pronunciation bees" in the progressive districts in the county:

"Roland and Rosamond were lovers. Rosamond was ephemeral but comely, hypochondriacal but not lugubrious, didactic but not dishonest, nor given to ribald nor truculent grimaces. Her pedal extremities were, perhaps, a trifle too large for playing organ and ails successfully, but her heart was not at all adamantine, and her address was peremptory without being diffuse. Roland, on the other hand, was of a saturnine countenance, at once splenetic and combative in disposition, so that his wassails and orgies were almost maniacal in their effects. He was a telegrapher by profession, having received a diploma from Caius College, but aggrandized his stipend by dabbling in philology, orthoepy and zoology during his leisure hours, so that he was accused of fetichism and tergiversation by his patrons. Still, his acumen and prescience were such that only a misogynist would discern that he was an aspirant for the gallows. His acetic, rather than ascetic, nature naturally inclined him to visit a chemical laboratory, well filled with apparatus, to which he had access, whence he often returned with globules of iodine and albumen on his caoutchouc shoes, which subjected him to the risk of numerous altercations with his landlady, a virago and pythoness in one, and with the servant, her accessory or ally. Roland had, however, become acclimated to his place, received everything with equability, reclined upon the divan where he contemplated the elysium where Rosamond dwelt, and addressed donative distichs to her in the subsidence of raillery. There was a certain diocesan who endeavored to dispossess Roland in the affections of Rosamond, but he was enervated by bronchitis, laryngitis, and diphtheria, which on their subsidence left his carotid artery in an apparently lethargic condition. He had sent Rosamond a ring with onyx, a chalcedonic variety of stone, and once hung a placard where he knew she would see it from her casement; but she steadfastly rejected his overtures and ogled him as if he were a dromedary. The diocesan betook himself to absolutory prayers, but continued his digressions and inquiries. Roland became cognizant of this amour, and armed with a withe he inveighed against this interloper, who defended himself with a falchion until Roland disarmed him, houghing his palfrey withal. After the joust, the prebendary abjectly apologized, albeit in a scarcely respirable condition, then hastened to the pharmaceutic's aerie for copaiba, morphine and quinine, and was not seen again till the next Michaelmas. Roland returned on Christmas Day, took an inventory of his possessions, which consisted of a large package of almond cement, a package of envelopes, a dish of anchovy sauce, a tame falcon, a book of acoustics, a miniature of a mirage, a treatise on the epizootic, a stomacher lined with sarcenet, a cerement of sepulture, a cadaver and a bomb. The next day the hymeneal rites were performed, and Rosamond became thenceforth his faithful coadjutant and housewife."

HIS OPINION.

What Secretary Rusk Has Said of Our State.

Following is an extract from a letter written by Hon. Jeremiah Rusk upon his return from his visit in this state:

"No man can form anything like a correct estimate of the wonderful resources, the marvelous productiveness and the inexhaustible wealth of California unless he visits this continent between the mountains and the sea and investigates, sees, touches and tastes for himself. I, perhaps, as an officer of the government, have had more material of an authentic nature from which to form an idea of the mineral and agricultural wealth of California, without seeing it, than almost any other man in the East during the past few years, and I am now ready to confess that, with all the information at my command, my trip through the State has been a succession of great surprises.

Going on the Stage.

From the S. F. Chronicle of Tuesday we glean that Dr. D. A. Hodghead, of that City, a practicing physician, has announced his intention to abandon his profession and go on the stage. The doctor is a brother of Dr. W. H. Hodghead, of Ukiah, and a son-in-law of Dr. E. W. King. In connection with the radical change the Chronicle says of him:

Dr. D. A. Hodghead, a practicing physician of this city, who has been for years the editor of the Pacific Medical Journal, has decided to go on the operatic stage. This news will be of great surprise to the doctor's friends and patients. Nothing in the appearance of the dignified man of medicine has led them to suspect that he was about to throw off the mantle of Æsculapius and don the sock and buskin. But the footlights have a greater charm for the doctor than the clinic or the sick room, and he has been quietly studying for two years under leading local teachers to perfect himself in the heavy tenor roles of the grand operas. He has a good figure, a handsome face and is young enough to make an impression among his lady auditors, while musical critics say that his voice, though yet untried on the stage, is of great range, strength and clearness. It is of the tenor robusto order, and has been very carefully trained.

The operatic trainer who has the doctor in charge says he reads his scores perfectly, and has thoroughly familiarized himself with such heavy operas as "Ernani," "Lucretia Borgia" and "Lucia," while in the lyrical operas, such as the "Bohemian Girl" and "Martha," he is well at home. He has also committed to memory all the tenor portions, both aria and recitative of "Traviata," "Il Trovatore" and "Rigoletto."

The doctor takes the high B flat with ease, while his high C is strong and clear. Although he has as yet not paid a great deal of attention to the dramatic part of his new profession, he will devote himself to a thorough study of the actor's art in a short time, with a view to perfecting himself in all the details of operatic performance.

The doctor is a married man, and has a pleasant home on Broadway. His wife is an accomplished musician, and assists him greatly in his practice before the piano. The doc or devotes several hours a day to his new avocation, and it will not be long before he will be ready to make his debut.

Report of Con Creek School.

Selling Tobacco to Minors.

Following is Section 308 of the Penal Code, as adopted by the Legislature of 1891, relating to the sale of tobacco to minors. Our merchants should remember that it applies to Ukiah as well as to all other places in the State:

"Every person who sells or gives or furnishes in any way to another who is in fact under the age of sixteen years, any tobacco, or preparation of tobacco, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars; provided, however, that this section shall not be deemed to apply to articles furnished on prescriptions from physicians authorized by law to practice medicine, nor to persons who supply such articles to their own children, nor to sales made to such minors upon the written consent of the parents or guardians of such minors first obtained in writing by the vender.

Hop-picking will commence nex week.

Oscar Foss of S. F., came up during the week.

Henry Barker is in Humboldt Co. buying cattle.

A social dance took place at the Thatcher hotel Tuesday Evening.

Arthur Thatcher and wife are visiting friends and relatives this week.

Rev. Z. P. Millington held services at the Hobland school house Sunday.

Mr. Isadore and Louie Abraham of Cloverdale, are stopping at Duncan Sprin s.

Lafe Van Dusen, Dr. King, Doc Standley and Mr. Pratt, of Ukiah, were in Sanel this week.

Robt. Duncan, accompanied by a friend from the city left on wheels for a trip to Mt. Shasta Friday.

Our little town has been free from brawls and rows for some time but as the hot season advances the combative instincts of a certain class became heated Sunday, which caused a few skirmishes to take place.

The little daughter of H. T. Carlile met with a very severe accident Monday. She and some other little girls were playing near the railroad track when the noon train passed, and a spark from the engine caught her dress afire, burning it completely off of her, and very seriously burning her back, hair and eye brows. She lies in a very critical condition.

ANNIE R.

Yorkville Items.

Miss Mary Wallarch, who has been with the family of E. M. Hiatt for three months has returned to Boonville.

About fifteen teams are busily engaged in hauling tanbark and pickets from this section.

Last Tuesday week a pleasant social dance was had at Jim Ward's hop house. Enough were present to dance three sets.

Ollie Ogle has left Yorkville for parts unknown. We expect to hear of his being taken up somewhere.

Mrs. E. M. Hiatt and family returned Friday from a month's stay at Bartlett Springs.

Lee Hiatt, who has been three months at Bartlett Springs, has returned.

Rev. Z. P. Millington and wife are visiting in Yorkville.

York & Ornbaun's passenger stage to Boonville is in good running order and doing well.

The Whitewings baseball club challenges the State.

Recently a young Yorkville man invited a young lady to go to a party with him. She refused. Instead of being angry he went on to Cloverdale and informed his friends that he and the lady were married, and put up an oyster supper.

ONE OF THE B'HOYS.

Man, the Masterpiece.

Man, the Masterpiece, or plain truths plainly told, about boyhood youth and manhood, is the title of a new book.

This work is endorsed by press and public; it is a chaste but thoroughl treatise for men, and contains much valuable matter not found in any other book published.

The author, Dr. J. H. Kellogg, is a member of the British Association, for the advancement of science, the Societe d' Hygiene of France, the American Public Health Association, editor of "Good Health," author of "The Home Hand Book of Domestic Hygiene and Rational Medicine," "Ladies Guide," and various other works.

We believe this book will receive the same generous welcome as the author's previous works.

Eupepsy.

This is what you ought to have, in fact you must have it, to fully enjoy life. Thousands are searching for it daily, and mourning because they find it not. Thousands of dollars are spent annually by our people in hopes that they may attain this boon. And yet it may be had by all. We guarantee that Electric Bitters, ifused according to directions and use persisted in, will bring you good digestion and oust the demon dyspepsia and install in stead eupepsia. We recommend Electric Bitters far all diseases of the liver, stomach and kidneys. Sold at 50c and $1 by J. R. Mathews, druggist.

Pronounced Hopeless, Yet Saved.

From a letter written by Mrs. Ada E. Hurd of Groton, S. D. we quote: "Was taken with bad cold, which settled on my lungs, cough set in and finally terminated in consumption. Four Doctors gave me up saying that I could live but a short time. I gave my self up to my Savior, determined that if I could not stay with my friends on earth, I would meet my absent ones above. My husband was advised to get Dr. Kings new discovery for consumption, coughs and colds. I gave it a trial, took in all eight bottles; it has cured me and thank God I am now a well and hearty woman." Trial bottles free at J. R. Mathews Drugstore. regular size, $.50 and $1.00.

Walking Leaves and Twigs.

The walking and climbing leaves of Australia were for over half a century considered the greatest of natural wonders. A party of sailors wandered inland and sat down to rest under a tree. A great wind shook to earth several dead and brown leaves. These presently began to show signs of life and crawl toward the trunk, which they ascended, and attached themselves to their respective twigs

Hence the sailors, who promptly ran away, said the place was bewitched. But the simple fact turned out to be that the so called "leaves" were really leaf shaped insects, having long, pendulous legs, which could be folded out of sight, and possessing the chameleon like power of varying their color to correspond with that of the foliage they are clinging to. Upon being shaken to the ground, instinct taught them to seek shelter of the friendly leaves again as soon as possible.

These walking leaves are frequently found in the woods of Illinois. The farmers call them "animated twigs," as they exactly resemble a bit of the tree. They are green when the trees are green, but as soon as the foliage changes they become brown. The writer of this was sitting under a tree reading in the woods of southern Illinois when one of these "twigs," as it was supposed to be, dropped on the page. It moved and thus revealed its identity. Its nature seemed to be that of a worm, and its vitality that of the very lowest. It died as soon as removed, and served as a bookmark for many years.—Detroit Free Press.

A Cheeky Man.

The cheekiest man of the season has been found. He entered a local barber shop not far from the city hall and asked if he might wash his face. The tousorial juggler said, "Of course."

"I'd like a clean towel, if you please," said the stranger suavely.

One could have heard a pin drop as the barber acquiesced and handed him a clean towel.

"May I brush my hair?" said the fastidious caller, as he stepped toward a looking glass. The barber left his customer and pinched himself to see if he was really alive.

"I have a good, clear glass here. Now, just a little oil for my hair. There!" said the stranger, as he rolled Corinthian bangs on his marble-white brow.

The barber opened his mouth wider.

"Now, just a little wax on my mustache," said the visitor. He suited the action to the word and twisted the ends of his mustache to his satisfaction.

"I am much obliged, sir," said the extra nice stranger, as he adjusted his hat, strolled to the door and disappeared.

A liberal fanning and application of cool water relieved the proprietor, but it was an hour or two before he fully recovered.—Manchester Union.

Antiquity of the Domesticated Horse.

The horse was probably first domesticated on the plains of Central Asia. This must have been at a very remote period, for on the sculptured monuments of ancient Assyria we find highbred, carefully caparisoned steeds given in admirable outline, showing how familiar and how favorite an object the horse must have been to the Assyrians. The mane is long and flowing or curled or in tassels. Three horses abreast drew the chariot in which were three warriors. Saddle horses led by grooms or bearing horsemen are delineated, sometimes in the thick of battle.

The horse was doubtless introduced into Egypt as late as the time of Hyksos, and sculptured representations of it are often conventional types peculiar to later Egyptian art. Instead of the life and energy displayed by the Assyrian horse, there is a rather weak attempt to represent life and energy and the effect produced is mechanical. Probably the horse of the Delta did not compare in beauty or speed with the Assyrian horse. Berjeau says he was more like the Dutch horse of our day.—Caroline K. Sherman in Chicago Herald.

He Got the Seat.

A nice young man got into a tram car a few evenings ago, and saw to his delight the only vacant seat was by the side of a young lady acquaintance. He made for that seat with joyous strides, and her eyes answered his with delighted looks. But just as he got there an elderly party walked up and dropped into the coveted seat. The young man approached more slowly and accosted the young lady.

"How is your brother?" he asked; "is he able to get out?"

"Oh, yes!" she answered.

"Will he be very badly marked?" he continued, and the old gentleman grew suddenly interested.

"Oh, no!" she said, "with the exception of a few marks on his forehead."

"Were you not afraid of taking it?" the young man continued, while the old gentleman broke out in a cold perspiration.

"Not at all," she replied; "I had been vaccinated, you know."

The seat was vacated instantly, the two innocent young hearts beat as half a dozen, and the prattle of "nice talk" strewed that part of the car, while an old gentleman scowled upon them from the distant corner.—London Tit-Bits.

The Cavalry of the Romans.

Devoted as the Romans were to war, the cavalry was an important part of the army. A great deal of adverse criticism has been passed upon their horsemanship and skill in managing the cavalry. The Prussian hussar officer, Warnering, pronounces Cæsar an indifferent cavalry general and ridicules his arrangements where cavalry are concerned. Cæsar, however, conquered all the same. His famous horse, credited with having a human fore foot, was equal to the star eyed goddess herself for victory.—Chicago Herald.

There is a hotel in Boston that is frequently mistaken for a church by strangers who pass one of its entrances. At the end of the corridor and visible from the street there is a peculiar feature of the stairway which, from a little distance, resembles the pipes of an organ.

A Preparation for the Bath.

Those who are troubled with offensive perspiration would do well when talking a bath to use a preparation made as follows: Take of soap powder and powdered borax each one-half ounce; essence of bergamot, six drams; oil of lemon and oil of neroli, of each two drams; oil of rosemary, thirty drops; attar of roses, five drops.

Or, if this is too expensive, the druggist can use the soap and borax and substitute cheaper perfumes. The oils should be well rubbed with these bases in a mortar and put into a bottle, which should be kept corked and in a cool place. One-half to one tablespoonful may be added to an ordinary bathtub full of water. This will be sufficient for cleanliness; at the same time it will prove an admirable deodorizer.—Boston Herald.

Two Extreme Cases.

In refreshing contrast to the man who lost a day's work because he bumped his head while getting up in the morning and thought he might have a headache if he didn't keep quiet, was a man up in Sprague's Mills, who fell as he was carrying a piece of timber about noon, but kept at work until time to go home at night, when he made the discovery that a bone in his leg was broken.—Lewiston Journal.

Royal Baking Powder

ABSOLUTELY PURE

Deafness Can't be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remidies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the eustachian tube. When the tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflamation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give one hundred dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that we cannot cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Vincent, of 6 Terrence Court, S. F. writes: "I am 60 years of age and have been troubled with constipation for 25 years. I was recently induced to try Joy's Vegetable Sarsaparilla. I recognized in it at once an herb that the Mexicans used to give us in the early 50's for bowel troubles. (I came to California in 1849,) and I knew it would help me and it has. For the first time in years I can sleep well and my system is regular and in splendid condition. The old Mexican herbs in this remedy are a certain cure in constipation and bowel troubles." Ask for

THE WATER QUESTION.

A Partial Report from the Committee Appointed Last Week.

The citizens assembled again Wednesday to talk over the water question and hear the report of the committee appointed last week.

Judge McGarvey presided as before. Jno. Buckingham, Secretary.

Chairman Brunner of the Committee made a partial report, and asked for further time. The partial report was accepted and the time extended two weeks.

The substance of the report was that they had investigated Doolan Creek and found barely five miners' inches of water. They had also concluded that the present water supply was insufficient, and the mains that carried it much too small.

The committee were recommended by speakers upon the subject to investigate further the needs of the town, for both present and future demands, the quantity and quality of water from all sources, and the probable cost of the various proposed systems.

Dr. King, Judge McGarvey, J. M. Mannon, Jerry Donohoe and others spoke upon the question, Mr. Donohoe referring the committee to Robinson Creek, where they had volume, fall, quality, nearness, and cost all in favor of the town. It was stated that past measurements had determined 54 miners' inches in Robinson Creek. This was thought to be incorrect, but it was concluded that if one-third that amount was found there it would be ample for the needs of the town. At the close of the meeting the trend of sentiment seemed to favor Robinson Creek.

The Charge Proved False.

EDITOR PRESS: In answer to our inquiry as to the truth of the charge of six murders in Girard College as announced by the Rev. T. A. Atkinson, from the pulpit of the M. E. Church of Ukiah, we get the following reply, direct from the Vice-President of the college:

"GIRARD COLLEGE,
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
August 3d, 1891.

Mr. Thos. McCowen—Dear Sir: You will excuse me for taking the shortest way of answering. I do not see what that man was thinking of. . . . It is utterly false. Yours respect,

Y. C. D. GREGORY,
Vice-President.

—THOS. MCCOWEN.

The Reservation.

The fact that the money ($75,000) has been sent from Washington to pay for the Round Valley Reservation lands as appraised, is proof that the report of the recent commission has been adopted, and that the matter is finally settled. There is some hesitation on the part of swamp land owners but it is expected that everyone will sell.

The new boundaries of the reservation include about two-thirds of the original territory. The other third will sold to the highest bidders.

Church Work.

Rev. J. B. Haston returned from the State Meeting at Santa Cruz very enthusiastic. He is much pleased with Ukiah and people, and is determined to make things move in the church. Among other progressive moves he will endeavor to get out a weekly paper devoted to his church. His energy should meet with a hearty response, and we trust his efforts will be crowned with success.

Blackberry Festival at Covelo.

A blackberry festival was given at the Presbyterian Church in Covelo, on the 14th inst. It was well attended and proved successful in every way. The following programme was well rendered:

Quartette .....
Messrs Barbee, Westerman, Henley, Melendy
Recitation ..... Miss Minnie Ferry
Recitation ..... Mrs Barbee
Song ..... Mrs. G. R. Redwine
Song ..... Miss May O'Neil
Also a series of exercises by the children.

Kids on a Strike.

N. Wagonseller has had a lot of boys, averaging about ten years of age, picking fruit the last week. Everything went well until Wednesday, when a portion of the crowd organized with a spokesboy and struck for higher wages, after the fashion of their elders. A raise was promptly refused, and the leader of the gang sent home.

An Old Jail Bird Rebegged.

Constable M. J. Byrnes of Westport, arrived in Ukiah Tuesday evening with Geo. Boyd of that place; he was lodged in the county jail on the charge of burglary. Boyd is an old offender and has seen the inside walls of Standley's hotel before.

Special Meeting of the Supervisors.

There will be a special meeting of the Board of Supervisors next Monday to pass upon the acceptance of the Eel River bridge which is now completed.

Teacher's Institute.

The Institute will probably be held about the middle of October. The teacher's examination followed by the Fair throws it this late. It is not yet known where it is to be held.

Teacher's Examination.

Supt. Dillingham informs us that the examination of teachers will begin on Thursday, Sept. 10th, Wednesday the 9th being a legal holiday.

Runaway.

Wm. Proudfoot's horse took another notion to run away Sunday, and with no one in the buggy made things hum along Clay street. The buggy was slightly damaged.

Barn to Rent.

Will hold five tons of hay, several horses, and one or two buggies or wagons. Handy watering trough. Rent: $2.50 per month. Apply at this office.

OUR NORTHERN BOUNDARY.

Sam Rice to Establish the Line Between Mendocino and Humboldt, and Mendocino and Trinity.

Sam. H. Rice returned from Sacramento Wednesday duly commissioned by Theo. Reichert, Surveyor General, to establish the boundary line between this county and Humboldt, and this county and Trinity.

The present line was surveyed by W. H. Fauntleroy in 1872. Mendocino county has always alleged that the line is incorrect. If the basis be the astronomical station at the head of Shelter Cove, the line should fall about one and one-fourth miles south; instead it falls about three or four miles. Mr. Rice is of the opinion that it is run about two miles too far south.

For some time Mendocino county has been trying to get the survey made, and Mr. Rice had the full endorsement of the Board to do the work.

The route extends about sixty miles over very rough country. Mr. Rice will begin work as soon as he is equipped; probably by September 1st. He will require nine men, and two and one-half or three months is needed to complete the work. He will complete the work this year, though it will take him into the snows.

It is a source of much satisfaction to know that the vexed question is soon to be settled, and in the hands of Mr. Rice we have the assurance that it will be settled in a satisfactory manner.

THE YACHT "WHISPER."

Something about the Pretty Vessel Enroute for Clear Lake.

The Yacht "Whisper," now enroute for Clear Lake, is said by her builder to be the finest vessel of the kind on the coast. No better yacht of any make floats in the bay of San Francisco.

She is in charge of James Greig, the builder, and a sub-contractor from the Union Iron Works, San Francisco. He will accompany the vessel to its destination and there put together, repaint, and launch her. He is accompanied by F. C. Williams, who will do the joiner work.

She is strictly a pleasure yacht and is consigned to the Floyd estate. The weight of the vessel is about 18 tons.

J. F. Hoadley, Jr. has the contract to transport the vessl from Ukiah to Lakeport. It is expected that the work of transportation will take seven days, but it may be belayed longer owing to the sudden death of Mr. Hoadley's father. Seven wagons, 16 horses, and 30 men are required in the transportation. The undertaking is a big one, but Mr. Hoadley is equal to it, and we predict a successful carriage of the boat to its destination.

The "Whisper" is schooner-rigged, and carries a wheelhouse and fine, neat, commodious cabin. She has two quarter boats, a flagstaff, jibboom, and fine figure-head. She measures 70 feet over all, is 10 ft. 6 inches wide, 7 feet deep. The funnel is 10 feet above deck. She has tripple expansion engines, a fine engine room and boiler casing, and is fitted with a complete set of signals. Her propeller runs beaft the rudder and below the line of keel, being the only one of the kind built in the State. She has a guaranteed speed of 17 knots an hour.

PHRENOLOGY.

A Temporary Revival of the Science in Ukiah.

Prof. Farris of the School of Fowler & Wells, was telling Ukiahites last week how much they know, how mean or how good they are, and what they are best adapted for. Several subjected themselves to the ordeal of a public examination, with varying degrees of satisfaction after the ordeal was over. Some startling revelations were made. A minister of the gospel with twelve children was found to be a miserly bachelor without veneration or belief in the bible. A blacksmith was shown up as devoted to the fine arts and the ideal in life. A printer was diagnosed as a successful salesman.

The private examinations were said to be highly satisfactory, but differing in point of satisfaction somewhat with the amount of fee paid. There is no doubt but that phrenology is a science, and that some know more about it than others, but its practical application is like trying to make a dog walk on his hind legs. He might so walk if he was something else than a dog.

A Conflagration on Wheels.

Last Friday a wagon and load of hay were burned. The team and wagon were the property of A.N. McPeak, and was being driven by Horace Hite. As he was near the flouring mill the hay was discovered to be on fire. It burned so rapidly that to put it out was impossible. The driver had only time to detach the horses. The flames, fed by a slight breeze, burned furiously, and in a short time both wagon and contents were consumed. There is no theory for the fire except that some one might have carelessly thrown a cigarette against the hay.

Death of J. F. Hoadley, Sr.

J. F. Hoadley, father of J. F. Hoadley, Jr., of this place, died at his home in Cloverdale, Monday morning. Deceased had been confined to his bed for some time, but was thought to be much better, and Sunday took a short ride. On Monday morning he dropped dead without any premonition to himself or friends. Deceased was about 60 years old. His son here received the sad intelligence by telegram and is almost prostrated by grief. He immediately left for Cloverdale.

TOWN TRUSTEES.

Light Franchises Wanted—Petition for Low License—Bills, Etc.

The Board met in regular session Monday evening; present: Carothers, Day, Isbell, Parker.

The minutes of last meeting were read and approved.

The following bills were allowed:

E S Ames, salary	63 00
S W Haskett, night watch	25 00
J H Jameson, water	7 00
Dewey & Co, papers	110 00
J J Miller, sprinkling, etc	16 75
J C Fargo, legal services	25 70
L S Sullivan, recorder's fees	9 00
Wm Yokum, arrests, etc	14 75
O W Parker, expenses to S F	20 00

An ordinance relating to sidewalks and the obstructions thereof was introduced by Trustee Parker.

The report of the Treasurer was read and referred to the expert of the books.

An ordinance relating to a franchise to the Telegraph Co. to maintain its wires and poles in the Town of Ukiah City was laid over till next meeting.

J. H. Seawell, representing, presented a petition asking that the liquor license be fixed at $80 or $100 instead of $400 per annum which said petitioners considered excessive and not calculated to further the material interests of the town. Petition laid over until next meeting.

Ordinance relating to the sewerage question laid over till next meeting.

An ordinance was introduced fixing the salary of nightwatch at $50, to be paid out of the Town Treasury. Vote: Parker, Carothers, yes; Day, Isbell, no; ordinance lost.

On motion carried the office of Street Commissioner (Mr. Yokum incumbent, drawing salary of $20 per month) was declared vacant. No appointment was made, as the Board considered the office rather ornamental than useful.

On motion carried all street work was left to the Street Committee.

An ordinance was introduced by G. W. Parker granting a franchise to Orrin Collier and associates to construct an electric light plant in the town of Ukiah City, work to be begun in six months and to be completed in one year. Mr. Collier asks for neither subsidy nor guarantee. The ordinance was laid over.

A. Bousque of San Francisco, submitted the following proposition to the Board: He would construct and maintain coal gas works in the Town of Ukiah City, provided the town would purchase a lot 50x100 for him at a point near the depot, and take 20 street lamps at $42 per month. He agreed to charge individuals the maximum price of $3.75 per M feet. His request will be formulated into an ordinance and presented at a call meeting. He may, further, retreat from his position of asking subsidy or guarantee and go ahead with the work if a franchise be granted.

There being no further business the Board adjourned.

Native Daughters' Entertainment.

The Native Daughter's entertainment last Friday evening passed off quite pleasantly as well as successfully in a financial way. The audience was not large but very appreciative, and were highly pleased at what they saw and heard.

The male quartet composed of Messrs. J. Jamison, J. Hunter, M. Carothers, and A. W. King, rendered two pieces, "Leave Your Burden at the Bottom of the Hill," and "Good Night," in a masterly, satisfactory manner. A hearty encore failed to secure their return.

Miss Nellie Standley recited "Asleep at the Switch" in a way which elicited much applause.

Miss Hattie Stanfield sang the "Huntsman's Horn," and responded to a loud encore with "Mignonette." Both pieces were well rendered in her usual, natural, happy style.

The feature of the evening was the rendition of "Fra Giacomo," a highly tragic piece, by Miss Hattie Nathan, a professional and accomplished elocutionist. Every line of the piece was recited with the utmost feeling, showing extended culture of an inherent talent. She responded to a thrilling encore with "Foreign Views of the Statue," a humorous piece, which, though entirely different from the first, was recited in an equally perfect style, showing the speaker's wide adaptability and range.

The Daughters are well pleased at the success of their entertainment. They succeeded not only in pleasing the audience but cleared $36. They want more members to join in their good work.

A Belligerent Cow.

Last Friday a stray cow roamed into town. Her advent was more in the form of an invasion than a friendly visit, for she immediately proceeded to "tackle" everything in sight. Wm. Yokum's mare came in for a large share of her animosity and was most unmercifully gored. Nor was her anger directed against animals alone. Several people narrowly escaped the fury of her horns, and one, Mr. Grieves, on the Leonard Hale place, was not so fortunate. The exasperated bovine perforated the seat of his pantaloons, impaling him, as it were. He sustained injuries from which he has not yet recovered.

A Picnic.

A Sunday School picnic will be given by the Glen Eden school at Scales Grove on Scott's Creek four miles south of Blue Lakes, on Thursday, August 27th. A fine programme will be rendered, consisting of songs, literary exercises and an address by Prof. J. B. Haston, pastor of the Ukiah Christian Church. Dinner will be served on the grounds for 25 cents to adults; proceeds to go for benefit of the Sunday school. Everybody is cordially invited to be present.

George Hoe, an old resident of this county, who lives on the head of Big River, was burned out a week ago last Sunday, and to make matters worse he was seriously ill at the time. This is the third time he has been burned out within a few years. The fire, supposed to be the work of an incendiary, originated in the loft of his barn, destroying it, twenty tons of hay, a lot of farming implements and five horses.—Beacon.

HARPER'S WEEKLY

JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION

The accompanying offer is made to give readers an opportunity of ascertaining the merits of HARPER'S WEEKLY, a periodical that the public may well be proud of. All the resources of a great publishing house, with its complete equipment of writers, artists, and engravers, are taxed to produce an illustrated weekly that is without a peer.

In its columns may be found all the salient features of contemporary life, described by the best writers of the day, and illustrated by the most distinguished artists of our time.

It appeals to all classes and caters to every refined taste, and it is the constant aim of the publishers to produce a periodical that will find a welcome in every home.

By sending the sum of twenty-five cents to Messrs. HARPER & BROTHERS, New York, N.Y., you will receive the four numbers following the date of receipt of remittance, which will afford you an opportunity of judging of its merits. Subscription price for one year, four dollars, postage paid. Subscriptions may begin with any number.

The Excursion.

The excursion Sunday brought about 600 well-behaved excursionists, who took in the town and surroundings and returned apparently well contented with their visit. The S. F. and N. P. have a good line for excursions. In fact it is about the only line that radiates from the city, that does run into a desirable country, and desirable climate. The people appreciate this fact, and the company do not take advantage of it by charging exorbitant rates.

Large Shipments of Sheep.

Large consignments of sheep are leaving Ukiah almost daily. Four cars were shipped Monday, five cars Tuesday, and fourteen cars Thursday. The raise in mutton is bringing it all about.

Jubilee Singers.

The celebrated Bailey Temperance Jubilee Singers will sing in the M. E. church, South, Wednesday, 26th inst. They are said to be very fine, and music-lovers expect a treat. Admission free.

Lots of Freight.

Agent Johnson informs us that a vast lot of freight is being shipped from this point. He estimates that the tan bark shipments for the season will exceed 3,000 cords.

The I X L Incubator.

There is no doubt but that the I X L is found to be the leading incubator on the market. Investigation proves it. T. J. SNEAD,

ABOUT CHERRIES.

SOUR VARIETIES SAID TO BE MOST IN DEMAND.

History of the Industry With Some Characteristics of the Various Species and Classes in Common Use—All Varieties Are from One Origin.

The cherry has been cultivated in Europe about as long as any fruit and it is supposed the wild fruit was used before it was cultivated. There are many cherry varieties and these by selection have been differentiated into families or groups. That all of our cultivated cherries had their origin in the one wild species of Europe seems to be proven by the fact that trees have been grown with the characteristics of all the groups from the seed of one variety.

There are four quite distinct groups or families in cultivation, two of the sweet class and two of the sour or acid class. The first or sweet group with mild subacid fruit are trees of rapid and large growth and are divided into two sub groups. The Biggeros, with firm fleshed or meaty fruit. These are white, yellow, red and black. The Napoleon Biggeros and Yellow Spanish are types. The Hearts, more usually with heart shaped fruits with softer sweeter pulp than the first group, but of the same colors. The black Tartarian and early Purple Guinge (pronounced jean) are types of the heart shaped group. These divisions are arbitrary but they are useful for classification.

The acid cherries are divided into two sub groups and are a little more clearly defined. They are the Dukes and Morellos. The Dukes in general appearance are about half way between the Morellos and sweets. The trees are small and generally of an upright growth. The fruit is generally smaller than the sweets, round or nearly round though some varieties incline to heart shape, with all the colors mentioned except yellow. The trees are hardier than the sweets but not so hardy as the Morello. The fruit is generally acid or sub acid, though the sweetest cherry when ripe, the Belle de Choisey, is placed in this sub group. The May Duke and Carnation are types of this group. They all do finely on this Coast. There are some very fine dessert cherries among them if allowed to become fully ripe. The May Duke nearly black—Reine Hortense—perhaps the most desirable on this Coast, is a beautiful tree and an enormous bearer of large, delicious fruit. The Belle de Choisey is a very pretty light coral red, round, sweet and delicious. The tree is very erect and is a great bearer. The trouble with the Dukes is that they are rather watery and tender for cooking, too soft for shipping and rather acid for dessert use. The May Duke, however, comes near being an exception. It is highly prized everywhere and especially where the climate is a little too cold for the sweets.

The Morello group comes last. These are usually small, round-headed trees with slender drooping branches and small thick leaves. This group is divided into two sub groups. One of which is the Kentish or Early Richmond, Early May, etc. It is a small, round, red, soft, acid fruit. It ripens early and quickly. The fruit, though watery, is highly esteemed for pies and canning everywhere except in California. There are several better though later cherries in this group than the Kentish. The Montmorencies belong in this group. Their foliage is smaller than either of the other groups and healthier in an unfavorable climate. These are the renowned cherry pie fruits. They are very dark red—nearly black—mostly round, quite firm in skin and flesh and very acid. Some of them are very rich when fully ripe. They ripen very slowly and are used for pies weeks before they are ripe. Few people know how good the common Morello is when thoroughly ripe, simply because they never saw a ripe one. The common black Morello, the type of the group, is the hardiest and healthiest of our old varieties of cherries. Some of the varieties of this class are red and light red but none are as good as the common black Morello. The black English Morello is the largest of the class. The tree is small, conical, enormously productive, late and very acid, much like some of the plums and ripe American gooseberries, so acid that sugar will not sweeten them. This was once the most profitable cherry in the East but the plum curculio eventually destroyed all the fruit.

The Chicago market is usually abundantly supplied with cherries from the Eastern shore of Lake Michigan. The sour cherries bring about double the prices of the sweets and are taken in unlimited quantities. The same is true in other large cities.

Here is a hint to the fruit growers of this Coast: There is money in the Morello group of sour cherries. They are prolific bearers, are much healthier and hardier than the sweets, are better shippers and when cherries are plenty bring more money. The Montmorencies are perhaps really the best but the English Morello sells best though it may be the poorest cherry in the world. It makes fine sweet pickled.

Professors Budd and Gibbs have selected and imported many fine hardy varieties of sour cherries from the north of Europe and Russia. Some are showing good promise. This Coast is sending fine eating cherries East and leaving the demand for culinary cherries unfilled. There is no shipping market for soft red sour cherries but there is for the right varieties.

Sour cherries can be grown on the mountains and in the colder portions of Oregon, Washington and Idaho. They should only be planted budded on mahaleb stocks. This root thrives on all soils. Even the sweet cherries thrive splendidly on it where the mazzard—stock must used on this Coast—would not live at all.

D. B. WIER.

RABBITS AND HARES.

Australia's Pests Not Likely to Flourish on This Coast.

What trouble the rabbits cause in Australia. The rabbit that is committing such devastation in that island continent is the common tame rabbit of England and Europe. It is there bred in vast numbers in warrens under control and is a source of a large amount of fresh meat. It was taken to Australia for the same purpose. That climate suited it finely and having there no natural enemies and being a prolific breeder it increased to such numbers as to become a pest. Millions of acres of pasturage have been ruined by them. Herds of cattle, horses and sheep have starved in consequence and many stock growers ruined. There are now so many rabbits in that country that man with all his engines of destruction can make no appreciable progress exterminating them. Government aid has been invoked, commissions appointed and millions of dollars spent in trying kill them off.

The rabbit is a gregarious, burrowing animal and honeycombs the land in every direction in immense natural warrens and it is almost impossible to dislodge them. They now spread over vast tracts of grazing country where their only enemy is man. They breed five to seven times a year.

There are no rabbits proper natives of this continent. Ours are all hares. The main points distinguishing the two families are: Rabbits invariably bring forth their young in burrows in the ground. The young are naked and their eyes are closed. The mother suckles her young for quite a long period. Hares are no gregarious. They bring forth their young in nests above ground or in more or less sheltered depressions. Few of them burrow at all. Some seek protection in the burrows of other animals. Their young are born clothed in a full coat of fur with eyes fully developed. The mother suckles them only a few days. The young are able to forage and to protect themselves almost from birth. They are not as prolific breeders as rabbits.

There is some danger of the domestic rabbit gaining a foothold on some parts of this Coast. A great portion seem adapted to it. Nearly all the valleys of Nevada, Arizona, Southern California and Eastern Oregon and Washington are adapted to its subsistence. There are enough here in a domesticated state for a start and they are carelessly guarded. Yet it may find too many enemies here to gain much of a foothold.

The latest news from the rabbit in Australia is that it has evoluted. The regular old fashioned rabbit was never known to climb. He considered his place was on or in the ground and staid there. The Australians put up wire nettings to keep him out of their gardens and orchards. The rabbit accepted the situation for a time until he got hungry. Then he climbed over and now no netting of any reasonable height deprives him of his dinner. We will next hear that the rabbit climbs trees for food.

The Choice of Fruits and Vegetables.

It is hard to reform people in buying their daily food. They constantly cheat themselves. The market gardener and fruit grower are obliged to assist them in cheating themselves. We will buy that which pleases the eye whether it be good or not. The big, red, thin juiced apple sells, while the dull yellow or rusty coats of medium size, a far superior apple, goes to waste or is sold for one-half or one-third what is readily paid for the red apple.

We choose the over bleached (white) celery, bleached until it is pithy, soft and with little flavor and its peculiar qualities that should give it value all extracted by the bleaching. The rich golden, somewhat green, crisp, firm, quickly bleached celery is left unsold or taken by the buyer with the slender purse. In this case as in many other the highest priced is the poorest quality. On the introduction of wax podded beans they were found to be good. The buyer takes the larger, thinner, white pods—by far the poorest of all and the darkest when cooked—and neglects the shorter, thicker, much more nutritious yellow podded varieties and much whiter when cooked.

The asparagus that sells for the best price is the great overgrown, nearly tasteless, watery, insipid, often hollow shoots, but when they are just starting from the ground with nothing but the sharp point of any value as food at all. While the medium sized, solid, rich, high flavored shoots that were allowed to grow two to five inches above the ground are neglected by all except the few who know the difference. It is the same through the whole category of foods and fruits.

It does seem hard to see the finest of the world's plums—the Green Gage—going begging with no takers at two bits a box and the Ponds Seedling, about the poorest plum for any and all purposes, selling rapidly at $1 a box. Such are the facts and the market gardener and fruit grower are obliged to meet them. They are obliged to grow such as they can sell. So long as best quality and richness has no market value, and size and beauty combined with worthlessness bring the money, just so long will our markets be burdened with the poorest articles.

The Food of Owls.

A large grey screech owl's nest was visited nearly every morning from the time the young hatched until they were able to fly. Mice were brought to the nest during the night, and nearly every one was the short tailed meadow mouse, the most injurious to the farmer. Invariably their heads were off and they were arranged around the margin of the nest with their tails outward. The smallest number at any time was nine and the number increased as the young birds grew. The highest number counted was twenty-seven. This proves the great value of these owls.

Tom Craig's Wonderful Pig.

Our friend, Jacob Staff, sends us the following, and assures us that it is a genuine article:

"The owners of fox dogs in Harrison county have all been telling about their fine dogs and their achievements; but Captain Tom Craig now comes to the front with a story of a pig that discounts all the dog yarns that the fox dog owners have been spinning. Captain Craig, being accosted with this scribe's usual salutation—'tell me something'—said: 'I have a fox dog that I want to tell you about. He is of the "root-hog-or-die" species, and is about 8 months old, and was a present to my little boy from my neighbor, Henry Stevens. He is a common looking speckled pig, and has been raised a pet with the puppies. He eats and sleeps with them, and when I go hunting he goes too, and will stay out with us three hours at a time.

"'It would amuse you to see him circling to come in and head the dogs when they get to far ahead of him. Of course he cannot keep up with them when they are running fast. The other night we were out hunting and the pig got behind, but he cut in and soon caught us, and was with us at the tree. I would have paid a good price for a picture of the scene at this tree. The dogs laid down, one of them drawing a bed of leaves around him. The pig went and laid down with him, putting his head on the dog's forefeet, which were crossed.'"
—American Field.

A TRIBUTE TO THE SHEAVES.

All day the reapers on the hill
Have plied their task with sturdy will,
But now the field is void and still;

And, wandering thither, I have found
The bearded spears in sheaves well bound,
And stacked in many a golden mound.

And while cool evening suavely grows,
And o'er the sunset's dying rose
The first great white star throbs and glows,

And from the clear east, red of glare,
The ascendant harvest moon floats fair
Through dreamy deeps and purple air.

And in among the slanted sheaves
A tender light its glamour weaves,
A lovely light that lures, deceives—

Then swayed by Fancy's dear command,
Amid the past I seem to stand,
In hallowed Bethlehem's harvest land!

And through the dim field, vague descried,
A homeward host of shadows glide,
And sickles gleam on every side.

Shadows of man and maid I trace,
With shapes of strength and shapes of grace,
Yet gaze but on a single face—

A candid brow, still smooth with youth;
A tranquil smile; a mien of truth—
The patient, starryed gleaner, Ruth!
—Edgar Fawcett.

A Copper Plate Found.

It was a piece of shining, bright metal, and the fisherman's eyes were sharp. And thereby hangs a tale.

It will be remembered that when the barkentine Thomas J. Stewart stuck on the ways and refused to take to the water one day last November, the tugboat Ralph Ross went to her assistance. After one or two sharp pulls that were ineffectual, all further proceedings were stopped by the sudden breaking of the post on the Ross to which was attached the tow line of the T. J. Stewart.

Now, to this post was secured a large copper plate weighing about twelve pounds, bearing the inscription of the builder's name, date of building and so on. This plate dropped overboard with the wreckage and was lost.

Wednesday a fisherman attending his weirs at Sandy point saw a glistening object in the water, and after much difficulty succeeded in obtaining possession of it. It was a copper plate bearing the inscription which proved to be the one lost from the tug Ralph Ross last November. The plate was returned to Mr. Ross on Thursday at his office.

The query is, How did that plate reach Sandy point, twenty-five miles away?

It is hardly reasonable to say that the current could have carried so heavy a body so far down the river, and it is readily explained by stating that the ice in some underhand fashion obtained possession of the Ralph Ross passport, and in its hurried journey to the south this spring forgot to leave it behind. It did not travel far under false pretenses, however, but has dropped its booty, which is now returned to its proper owners.

Mr. Ross is to have the plate polished, handsomely framed and hung on the wall of his office on Exchange street as a reminder of the queer things that Dame Nature will sometimes do.—Bangor News.

How Old Masters Are Made.

Apropos de bottes, I find two curious business advertisements in my foreign papers. One is that of an ingenious person whose address is at the Batignolles, and who announces himself as a "signaturist" and a "monogramist," and guarantees signatures of any artist at any period of his art at a franc apiece. Only think of it! For the price of a pony of brandy at Delmonico's one may convert any unidentified find of the junkshop into a Rembrandt, a Velasquez, a Millet, or whatever else one chooses.

Moreover, this expert announces that he "identifies" pictures for his clients. A wizard capable of transforming pictures could naturally identify them by the same process. There are some "collectors" in America whom it would pay to make a trip to Paris and a visit to the Batignolles. The demand for old masters has stimulated the ingenuity of some German genius in another direction. A standing advertisement in the leading art magazine of Germany is that of a "competent artist," as he signs himself, who offers to furnish copies that cannot be identified from the originals of any pictures in any of the public collections.—Collector.

Annihilated in Midair.

About 8 o'clock, just before the heavy shower, several gentlemen were sitting in front of a store in West Nashville when one of the party observed a large turkey buzzard that was sailing majestically across the sky, and remarked that if the buzzard did not look out he would get wet.

Their attention was thus called to the bird, and all were lazily watching its flight, when suddenly, just as it was opposite to and above them, they were blinded by a flash of lightning, which seemingly exploded on the back of the buzzard. They were astonished somewhat, but recovered themselves and looked for the buzzard, but, alas, the majestic bird was out of sight. All that was left of him was a few black tail feathers, which fluttered pathetically to the ground.

Those who witnessed the phenomenon succeeded in catching several of the scorched feathers, which they exhibit in corroboration of the story.—Nashville American.

Mr. Sears' Imported Razorbacks.

The Tamworth hogs, which J. Montgomery Sears has imported for breeding purposes, are an old English breed characterized by the large proportion of lean meat to the fat in its make up. It has of late been overlooked in the effort to breed for fat, hence has seldom been mentioned or heard of. Mr. Sears has called public attention to the breed by his importations, and still others now have them under trial. They are medium in size, light in the shoulder, deep sided, and rather fat as compared with the modern models, and "red" in color. Their recommendation is that they are unlike the rounded balls of fat that have been furnishing us our models.—Bangor Commercial.

A Boy Treed by a Wild Cat.

Charlie Heath, of Brooks, a boy sixteen years old, was attacked in that town the other day by a strange animal, probably a wildcat. The boy saw the animal in a tree and threw a stone at it. Thereupon the animal sprang down upon the boy and they had quite a fight, in which the clothes of young Heath were torn, his head and face and parts of his body badly scratched. The boy then managed to climb a tree and with his heavy boots would kick the animal down as it tried to get to him. After some time the beast became tired of this and slunk away.—Lewiston Journal.

Millions in Sawdust.

A well known mechanic of Portland, Me., is about taking out a patent on an invention for converting the sawdust and other waste from mills into a wood pulp of peculiar strength and quality that he says can be utilized for nearly every purpose in which wood is used. If half his claims prove true his invention is a most valuable one. One of the largest business houses in Portland have offered the inventor the free use of one of their factories for a year for experimenting purposes.—New York Telegram.

Good Machines and Poor Workmen.

It does not pay to fit up a shop with poor machinery if you want good work, nor do you want to put bad workmen in charge of your expensive tools. You are doing things by halves, introducing a bull into your china shop, and playing with fire in a manner that is certain to result in burned fingers. Good machines will never do good work in the hands of poor mechanics, and although a good workman will often do wonders with the poorest of tools, the combination is not economical, and is usually unsatisfactory to employer and employed. Good tools operated by competent mechanics last longest, do the best work, produce in every way the most satisfactory results, and are always cheapest in the long run.—Safety Valve.

The inquiry among French authors as to the relative value of the real and ideal in fiction called forth the following from a lady: "In order to charm and attract me a novel should be sentimental, impassioned, graceful, elegant, full of illusions and not the simple photograph of my ordinary existence, which weighs me down on account of its vulgarity and commonplace, which follows me everywhere, which I know too well and which I would like to forget."

THE COTTON BLOSSOM CLUB.

Brother Gardner's Address on the Death of Brother Hawkins.

"My frens," said Brother Gardner after the meeting had been opened in due form, "I hev a sorrowful dooty to perform in announcin de death of Brudder Clingstone Hawkins, a member of dis club libin in Newark, who passed from airth away fo' days ago. Dis am de fust death dat has tooken place in our ranks since de club was organized, an it affords us cause fur serus refleckshun. I know it are usual in sich cases to applut a committee an to move an resolve, an to claim dat de deceased had all de virchews an none of de vices of mankind, but we shan't foller out dat programme.

"Brudder Hawkins was only a common man like de rest of us. Anything like hard work made him tired.

"He wasn't de mos honest an upright man in de world. I think he would prevaricate as quick as any man I eber knowed, and I'm sartin he owed mos of us borrowed money.

"In losin Brudder Clingstone we can't say dat a shinin light has bin blowed out forever. De light has bin blowed fas nuff, but he was no shiner. He nebber eben riz up to support a moshun in dis club.

"We can't say dat he was liberal, charitable, modest, forgivin, conscientious an full of integrity, 'kase he wasn't. His wife supported de fam'ly while he put on de style, an if he had found a doller bill on de floah in dis hall he wouldn't hev boddered too ask who lost it.

"He was jist fair to medium, same as de rest of de world. He had some good pints an some bad ones. Dar was many a better man, an some few not so good. We will put the usual emblem of sorrow on de doahknob, an send a letter to his wife sayin dat we hope he is better off, an she too.—M. Quad in New York World.

Truth Stranger Than Fiction.

Mr. Angler—It sometimes occurs that, in trout fishing particularly, all the known arts of the piscator will fail to lure the wary game, and in one instance I remember having to try a very unsportsmanlike recourse.

Mr. Listener—Yes? What was that?

Mr. Angler—I was fishing one day in the Sprain brook and discovered in a deep pool an old trout that must have weighed seven pounds. I tempted him first with all the artificial bait at my command, from gray hackle to flamingo flies, shook a button off my flannel shirt into his eye, offered him a strawberry on hook and a forelock of my red head, flirted all the known brands of worms in front of his suggestive mouth, and wasted all my lunch on him in the way of decoy, and when I was just about to give up in despair a thought struck me. Acting upon it I went to a neighboring farmhouse, borrowed a two quart syringe used for the demolition of insect pests, walked back and drew all the water out of the pool, and walking into the exhausted reservoir picked up my seven pound speckled bauble.—Boston Courier.

Too Late.

Not a Millinery Shop.

"Can I get something to eat here?" asked an eastern man of the proprietor of a Montana "hotel." The landlord eyed him suspiciously.

"Tenderfoot, eh?"
"I suppose so."
"Eat pie with yer knife?"
"No."
"Make a noise when you drink?"
"Try not to."
"Pick yer teeth with the fork?"
"Certainly not."
"Take off yer hat at the table?"
"Yes."
"Smack yer lips when you strike somethin' good?"
"No."

"Then you can't eat here. I fed a feller last spring that parted his hair in the middle and had the same brand on his face that you've got, and he hoodooed my place for a month. They's a halfbreed runs a feed trough farther down the street. Guess he'll take you in—he don't know no better—but, by gum! as long as I run this ranch it ain't goin' to be no millinery shop. Day, stranger."—Detroit Free Press.

During the ten years ended with 1890 the country received more than 829,000 Italians. In the last year of the ten the Italians constituted almost one-eighth of the total immigration. About the same fraction of the whole was made up of Russian Jews and Poles.
